Trout Breeding.

HOW IT IS DONE AT BELLOWS FALLS.

A correspondent of the Springfield Republican says:—

As much attention has lately been called to the matter of fish breeding, a sketch of a late visit to the private trout ponds of J. C. Bridgman, of Belows Falls, may be of interest. Mr. Bridgman is a retired lawyer, living on a farm a little from the center of the village. The numerous springs on his property suggested to him the feasibility of fish-raising as a means to his own gratification; but his experience of only one year has taught him that profit can be combined with pleasure. From seven to twelve beautiful springs come welling up at the base of the mountain where his house stands, and he has converted his "back yard" into ponds of "living water," the successive ponds being filled with fishes according to size. As "dogs eat dog," so trout eat trout—and it is necessary for their safety to keep those of the same age by themselves. A trout will swallow his brother of two thirds his own size. The ponds are all connected by sluices, which are covered with wire gauze, for the double purpose of protecting the fish and catching all leaves and sticks. In pond No. 1 are 3000 large trout, from five to twelve inches in length; the pond is no larger than a good sized parlor, and to see these beauties swimming about would make an old fisherman nervous. They are as tame as gold fish, and make the prettiest of pets. In all the ponds, some eight in number, are 50,000 trout, of all ages, from three weeks to as many years; and Mr. Bridgman expects to have 500,000 by another year.

The modus operandi of trout-raising may be of interest to the uninitiated. Trout begin to lay their eggs (spawn) about the first of November, and for this purpose they seek the head waters of brooks, the better to insure safety for the spawn, the female being always accompanied by the male on these tours. Only a part of the spawn are ripe at a time, and it takes about ten days for a female to be rid of all her spawn, during which time their escort remains with them. The spawn are pressed out by the female swimming rapidly along the rocky bed of the stream. In her wake follows the male, impregnating the ova of the female. A raceway has been built by Mr. Bridgman to which the fish have access, and as they enter this spawning season are caught, and the spawn are pressed out with the finger and into the impregnating pan filled with pure spring water. Then the milt of the male is put in to impregnate it. It is estimated that the spawn of a good sized trout contains 1000 eggs, but Mr. Bridgman's experience has taught him that the figure is nearly 2000. The milt of one male is sufficient to impregnate the spawn of five fish of the same size; 15 grains of milt will impregnate 10,000 eggs, yet in practice much more is used. The eggs weigh one grain each and average 1-16 of an inch in diameter. From the impregnating pan the spawn is placed in gravel-filled trays and laid in the troughs of the hatching house—a house double boarded and sawdust lined. Over these trays is conducted a gentle stream of pure spring water, filtered through several thicknesses of flannel, and then of a filter of gravel. During the entire process the eggs are not allowed contact with the atmosphere. Nothing now remains to be done except to see that no harm comes to the eggs and remove such as spoil. The water has an even temperature of 45 degrees, and it takes from 40 to 75 days for the hatching process.
